TRANSFORMING TOMORROW!

As companies position for the digital revolution, fixing the systems are not enough. Manning and developing people is the key. New agile leadership must replace traditional management.

How do we create new leadership and company structures prepared for utilizing new tools and digital natives? How can companies avoid becoming Kodak or Nokia? Our speakers share key insights from their digital journeys, as well as perspectives on key success factors to succeed with digital transformation.

The maritime industry is changing, undergoing several transformative shifts. This represents a unique span of exciting career opportunities for bright minds both at sea and on shore. Ripe for disruption, undergoing digital transformation, increased sustainability-focus, international opportunities and cultural diversity – the maritime sector should be an attractive path for millennials as well as seasoned professionals from other industries.

However, shipping is losing out in the global talent battle, failing to properly communicate the industry’s role in the global economy, and still perceived from the outside as closed, conservative and dominated by middle-aged men.

We gather inspirational role models who have succeeded in creating waves within their area, and open up for a discussion between dynamic industry leaders on how shipping can learn from role models in other industries to increase the industry’s attractiveness.
